blocks at five shillings an acre had been carried. Alienation is good when it results in improved settlement, but apart from that it is an undesirable anticipation of the future. In the course of nearly twenty-three years we have alienated about thirty million acres. If that were occupied in thousand-acre blocks it would give us thirty thousand families settled on the land, and that would have been something to rejoice over. But then the figures show us that eleven millions have been sold at auction, and nearly three millions have gone in improvement and pre-emptive purchases and volunteer land orders. Between thirteen and fourteen million acres therefore have gone to the run-holders to enable them to confirm themselves in their position. Even that would not have so much mattered if all the land free-selected had remained in the hands of the smaller class of settlers. More than sixteen million acres have been taken up by conditional purchase, and if it were all still subserving the cause of small freehold settlement there would be a great result to show. But then the official figures reveal that more than sixty thousand of these selections have already changed hands, and that means an area not very far short of 8,000,000 acres, and that means nearly half of the selected land. Who are the transferees? Of course everybody knows into whose hands the bulk of the land has gone. There are still left 8,000,000 acres nominally in the hands of conditional purchasers, and even this would be something if it was all being held in moderate-sized freeholds, but a part of it is already booked for the squatters, although how much it is not possible to say.

But although these figures tell of failure, there are other figures to be marshalled which tell of success, and these Sir John Robertson indicated. If the law has not established the yeomanry we expected, it is a law under which the pastoral interest has flourished. When we remember how "The bill, the whole bill, and nothing but the bill," was carried to the cry of "Down with the squatters!" it is certainly curious that the main defence of the law should now rest on the argument that it has been beneficial to the pastoral interest. In itself we do not consider it a bad argument, because the pastoral occupation of the soil has been during all these years, and is still, the main industry of the colony, and is the source of that wealth, which sustains all the other industries. But it would not be difficult to show that the pastoral industry has thriven in spite of, and not in consequence of, the law, and that though run-holders have been heavily burdened with debt, and driven to great shifts, and often to very crooked courses, they have managed to circumvent their enemies and hold their own.

Let it be granted as a matter for great satisfaction that improvements, variously estimated at from twenty to forty millions, have been made in fencing and in the conservation of water. Will any one venture to say that the improvements would have been less if the tenure had been better? Let us take the case of the free selectors first. As respects the transferred selections, those improvements have nearly all vanished. The law exacted them, and they were made, or said to have been made; but the traveller who searches for them finds either no trace, or else deserted huts and dilapidated fencing. Whatever labour and money was spent upon those improvements has been simply wasted, whereas had the holding been of a character that would have ensured its continuance, the improvements would have been bona fide from the first, and perpetually growing. Compare the state of the conditional purchases that have been held to and that have been fairly worked, with the condition of those that have been transferred, and then we see what a loss to the country such settlement has been. What there is of bona fide settlement is good, and is to be rejoiced over, but we could hardly have had less of it under the old law than there had been anything like a vigorous and honest administration. The probability is that we should have had more, for the success has been greatest in what would have been naturally selected as large agricultural areas, or in the neighbourhood of railways. If we turn to the case of the squatters, we find that their improvements are known to be made at a great risk, and though in many cases they are purchased, the improved land apart from the rest of the run would have but a small value. With anything like a tenement the improvements would have been much more satisfactory. The essence of the bill now before the House, whatever may be its defects of detail, is to get rid of the uncertainty of tenure for both classes—to give the selector a grazing area enough of his time. It is premature to judge whether this high fate is in store for our City Architect; but, approving the skeleton of his plan, let us suppose it will be perfect when completed. And, carrying pleasant suppositions a little farther, let us endeavour to think that the great hall satisfactorily completed, the work expected of it will be satisfactorily accomplished—that, with the lines of dignity and beauty around or beside them, the city fathers will put on garments of decorum, honest patriotism, and unaccustomed self-control; that the meeting place prepared, the great and proper meeting will be held whenever occasion demands; that, the majestic saloon ready, suitable hospitalities may not be wanting to grace the softer side of civic life; that, platform and auditorium, unsurpassed for convenience and adaptability, the great speakers and singers of the world may come and go and cast no stone and shake no dust at us on their departure; that the various arts of the city may take all reasonable advantage from a proper theatre of display; and that those who by social status and pure power are privileged to strengthen patriotism and encourage every higher form of amusement and all true art may not beat about for another excuse when the old one of no proper hall is removed. Lastly, that this gap being filled, the power of emulation will work in another directions, so that the house or home of every institute may be worthy of the thing it serves and adorns.

Professor Dickey has written a letter to the Times detailing on the lawlessness of the Government of Victoria in not allowing the Irish immigrants to land, and adding that to put them on board a vessel of war aggravated the scandal. He seems not to be aware that it was in New South Wales, and not in Victoria, that they were received on board the Nelson, that they went voluntarily, and that the Commonwealth acted under direct instructions telegraphed by the Imperial Government. Furthermore, he forgets that the Government of Victoria acted on the principle, sicut populi summa lex. Mr. Service was reasonably afraid of disorder if the men landed. The police could not undertake to defend them if they landed and mixed freely with an excited people. The Government had two alternatives—the rise of disorder, or a high-handed treatment of the men; and it chose the latter. Did it in the interest of the country choose wrongly? Will Mr. Dickey say that it was prohibited from making such a choice, and that ought to have respected individual liberty at any risk to public order? That it was a violation of liberty was perfectly well known, and without what was thought to be adequate justification it would not have been tolerated. What was also bad, it played into the hands of the assassination party, and made it progressively more difficult to get informants. But Mr. Dickey and some other English commentators overlook the fact, that so far from desiring to bulk the English Government, or even of being indifferent to its welfare, it had become simply impossible to carry out the Imperial intentions. What had been desired and intended was that the men should land unknown, and nobody had blundered. Instead of their being sent out separately, and in ships with few companions, they were put together in a crowded steamer. Their identity was disclosed before they reached an Australian port, and the news of their arrival was flashed by telegraph all over the country. They could only land marked men—the observed of all observers. It was better that they should not land at all than land so.

A more melancholy incident than that recently telegraphed from Alice Springs will scarcely be found in the whole history of Australian exploration. It will be remembered that the beginning of the tragedy was the lying story of a blackfellow that a party of squatting pioneers had been murdered by blacks, and their bodies devoured by wild dogs. The evidence seemed vague, and the story was generally disbelieved; still the officials of the South Australian Government deemed it their duty to make some investigation, and a properly equipped party was sent out to question the wilderness, to discover crime if crime had been committed, and, if possible, avenge it. Long before any word was received from the search party, however, the supposed victims turned up in various localities, and the blackfellow's rumour went the way of all myths. Not was any anxiety felt about the search party. They had not been absent for any dangerously prolonged period when one returned, a survivor, with the horrible report. All my compatriots had died of thirst:—"I am sorry to report that all the police party except myself and the black boy died of thirst."—Wednesday evening, all the horses." In our comfortable city of ordinary rural life we scarcely realize that such horrors as that are still possible in Australia; but having them brought home to us in grim and realistic fashion, it is not well to ask how may they be avoided! It is not easy to discover an answer. Far back these take their lives in their hands whenever they face unbroken land, and they can only be reasonably secure when under the control of thoroughly experienced bushmen and explorers. It is an old bush saying that a new chum will die in a paddock. Was there anything of the new chum about those policemen who died in that great inland paddock? If so, some responsibility lies at the door of their employers. None but good tried men should be placed in any position of command out there, and they, if necessary, should be bought at any price. The riches of the wilderness would pay the price, and the men are available if the price were forthcoming. Niggardliness to poor explorers, and lavish bounty to the investors who follow in their tracks should not be characteristics of the Government of a new country.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The interest which is felt at home in the New Guinea annexation question is manifested by the crowded attendance at the meeting of the Royal Colonial Institute on Tuesday night, on which occasion a paper on the subject was read by Mr. Wilfred Powell, R.N., who was for some years engaged in a survey in the vicinity of the island. The telegram which Baron Mikluk-Maclay sent home to the British Government, to the effect that the natives of the MacLay coast of New Guinea demand political autonomy under European protection, was read to the meeting, and appears to have excited some emotion. A general discussion followed the reading of Mr. Powell's paper. Rear-Admiral Moresby, Sir Charles Lilley, the Duke of Manchester, and Mr. Powell taking part in it.

According to latest advices from Madagascars, the French are willing to negotiate for a peaceful settlement with France. Their forces are concentrated about seven miles from Tamatave, and are actively resisting the advance of the French troops. The French have bombarded Foulepoint.

The chairman of the Eastern Extension Australasia and China Telegraph Company, at a meeting of the company on Wednesday, stated that if Australia would secure the company its present earnings, and the benefit arising out of the natural increase of business, the company would reduce the tariff considerably.

The Marquis of Lorne is to read a paper at the next meeting of the Colonial Institute, on Canada. He is the author of an article in this month's number of the Contemporary Review, on the question of federation of the colonies. He thinks it would work well, if one province was too powerful. The Spectator of Victoria against the national energy and wealth of Victoria as a possible danger against federation. The Post thinks the federation of Australia would be hailed with universal approbation.

Now Zululand comes news of more fighting between the native tribes. Two sanguinary engagements were fought, Union forces being routed on both occasions.

The British troops recently sent into Zulu territory to enforce the surrender of Cetwayo are under orders to return without delay. To ensure the safety of Cetwayo, he is to be taken to Capetown.

Now miscellaneous items of news by cable we learn that the Servian insurrection, although it assumed very formidable proportions a few days ago, has now been quelled. The jury empanelled to try Poole—charged in Dublin with complicity in the murder of a man named Keeney—was unable to agree to a verdict, and were discharged. The bill which was agreed to in the vicinity of Suskin, in Egypt, has made another sudden onslaught upon the Egyptian troops and routed the entire detachment. The Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs has paid a visit to Prince Bismarck: the meeting is said to have been of a very cordial character. The detonators found at Birmingham in some holes of sheepskin, which had been sent from South Australia, turned out to be patent bengal alarms. Arrangements have been made for an ocean race from Plymouth to Queensland between the yacht Vestal and the well-known clipper ship Northern Monarch.

We learn from the Telegraph Department that the Cable Company's repairing steamer Agnes left Bosphorus on the 13th instant to work on the old Darwin cable.

In the Assembly last evening the preliminary business was not very heavy, but it included the introduction of a bill by Mr. O'Connor "To prohibit within the Metropolitan Police District the opening of butchers' shops on Sundays." The debate on the second reading of the Land Bill was resumed by Mr. Stokes, who was followed by Messrs. Spring, Garrett, and A. G. Taylor, and the discussion was then further adjourned until Wednesday next. The House rose shortly before midnight until this afternoon.

The Full Court, as constituted by their Honors Sir James Martin, C.J., Mr. Justice Windley, and Mr. Justice Innes, yesterday continued the hearing of the Equity appeal, Hickleton v. Barbour. The counsel for the defendant, who is the applicant, concluded their arguments late in the afternoon, and the further hearing was adjourned until the adjourned sitting for Equity appeals on the 17th, 18th, and 19th proximo. Mr. Justice Windley disposed of several divorce matters on Monday and yesterday. In the suite Brown v. Brown and Coe, Gascoigne v. Gascoigne, and Rogers v. Rogers decrees nisi were granted. To-day the Full Court will sit in Common Law, and his Honor Mr. Justice Faure will hear general business in Equity.

A meeting of the Sydney Municipal Council was held at the Town Hall yesterday, at which the Mayor occupied the chair, and there was a fair attendance of aldermen. A discussion took place in reference to the proposal of the Government to abolish the shanties at Globe Island with a view to the slaughtering for the city being done in the country. On the motion of A German Playfair, however, a motion was affirmed in favour of acquiring a site for shanties within a reasonable distance of the city if the proposal of the Government were carried into effect. It was also authorized that a number of works should be undertaken, and particulars of these will be found in another column.

This boat harbour and landing-place at Fort Macquarie, which are used chiefly by the officers and men of the ships of war that visit Sydney, and also by his Excellency the Governor, are being greatly improved. The boat harbour is to be considerably enlarged, and besides being deepened, where necessary a large "gridiron" will be laid down for the accommodation of watermen's boats. The old stone wall at present enclosing the boat harbour is to be almost wholly renewed, and as a means for the prevention of accidents it will be surmounted by a neat iron railing. On the outer face of the landing-place there will be a wooden staging and steps for the convenience of boats from the monsieur. The improvements are being made on the recommendation of the Governor and the Commodore.

Mr. E. W. Lam, of this city, has received a communication from the South Australian Minister for the Northern Territory, stating that steps are being taken to survey north of the M'Arthur and establish a port there.

A CORRESPONDENT writes under date November 14:—

"The pink glow was visible last night on the western horizon 1 hour and 40 minutes after sunset—that is, when the sun was 25° below the horizon. Taking the earth's diameter at 7900 miles, it is fair to assume that the earth from which the sunlight was reflected is at an altitude of 95 miles at least from the earth's surface."

The first anniversary of St. Philip's branch of the Church of England Temperance Society was celebrated last Wednesday evening in the large schoolroom. The Rev. J. D. Lanier, minister of the church, presided. The room was very tastefully decorated with flowers, &c., conspicuous among which was the word "WELCOME," in white letters on a scroll ground. A sumptuous repast having been prepared by the younger members, a vocal entertainment followed.
